Introduction

Designed by Leonardo Rossano, Adinne originates from a primary gesture: hand drawing. At the core of the project are essential sketches—fundamental tools in the creative process and the moment when the idea takes shape in an intuitive and human way. The legs, deliberately solid, are crafted from solid wood and contribute to a strong, architectural presence. The absence of a rigid backrest represented a structural challenge from the very beginning, carefully addressed and resolved throughout the product's development, ultimately achieving a balance between visual lightness and stability.

Progettata da Leonardo Rossano, Adinne nasce da un gesto primario: il disegno a mano. Alla base del progetto vi sono schizzi essenziali, strumenti fondamentali nella fase creativa e momento in cui l'idea prende forma in modo intuitivo e umano. Le gambe, volutamente massicce, sono realizzate in legno massello e contribuiscono a costruire un'immagine solida e architettonica. L'assenza di uno schienale rigido ha rappresentato sin dalle prime fasi una sfida strutturale, affrontata e risolta con attenzione nello sviluppo del prodotto, fino a raggiungere un equilibrio tra leggerezza visiva e stabilità.

Leonardo Rossano

“A pure and essential line that defines a quiet balance between structure, lightness, and everyday elegance.”

Leonardo Rossano is an Italian designer whose work combines formal clarity, functional thinking, and a refined sense of proportion. With a background in architecture and design, he develops projects that translate essential gestures into elegant and highly usable objects. His approach focuses on balance between structure and lightness, creating products defined by precision, simplicity, and a strong connection to everyday use.
